

Biography

Dr. Peacock completed her doctorate in clinical psychology at Drexel University in 2005. During her clinical internship at Friends Hospital in Philadelphia, she worked with inpatients across the lifespan and received intensive training in severe mental illness including bipolar disorder, major depression, anxiety, substance abuse, and personality disorders. In 2009 as an adjunct faculty member, Dr. Peacock taught personality assessment and child psychopathology for Drexel University's Master's Program in Psychology.

For three years during her graduate school experience, Dr. Peacock served as clinical coordinator of the Mentally Retarded Sex Offenders Project at MCP Hahnemann University, was actively involved in research regarding cognitive-behavioral treatment for sex offenders and is certified in plethysmography. She has conducted research in the areas of repressed and false memories, juror decision-making, physician-assisted suicide, and aggressive behaviors. Dr. Peacock was recipient of a grant award from the American Psychology-Law Society for empirical graduate research that addressed psycho-legal issues (i.e., competency to stand trial). She has also served as assistant to the chair of the Fellows Committee of the American Psychological Association's Division 33: Mental Retardation/Developmental Disabilities.

Dr. Peacock has published scholarly journal articles in the Journal of Applied Social Psychology, Journal of Sexual Aggression, and Psychology, Crime & Law. She is coauthor of the chapter Case Formulation in Cognitive-Behavior Therapy in the Comprehensive Handbook of Psychological Assessment and coauthor of the chapter Cognitive-Behavior Therapy for Adults with Mental Retardation in the Encyclopedia of Cognitive Behavior Therapy. She has presented her research at scholarly conferences including the American Psychology Law Society, World Congress of Behavioral and Cognitive Therapies, American Psychological Association, and the European Association of Psychology and Law.

In 2016-17, Dr. Peacock completed a forensic residency with Dr. David Bernstein of Forensic Consultants where she received specialized training in forensic evaluations including threat/risk assessment, high-conflict divorce cases, parenting coordination, and bullying. Her areas of interest and specialized training also include trauma and PTSD, personality disorders including psychopathy and narcissism, malingering, personal injury and civil rights cases, sexual abuse, sexual harassment and disability. In 2018, Dr. Peacock started a private clinical and forensic practice in Greenwich, CT.
